DWI Blood Testing In New Jersey

Disclaimer: The contents of this presentation are general in nature. Please use your discretion while following them. The author does not guarantee legal validity of the tips contained herein.

- The police in New Jersey are legally allowed to stop a driver for suspicion of driving while intoxicated (DWI).
- Once a driver is stopped for suspicion of DWI, a Breathalyzer test will be done to check the blood alcohol concentration (BAC) of the driver.

- Sometimes the police officer may decide to take a sample of the driver's blood for testing and analysis.
- DWI blood testing is also done in cases where the driver has been seriously injured and is unable to take a Breathalyzer test.

- If the driver was stopped for suspicion of DWI and he or she refuses to take a Breathalyzer test, the police officer has the authority to take the suspect to the hospital to draw blood.
- The arrested driver must agree to the blood test at the hospital.
- Refusing to do so can result in serious penalties.

- If you or someone you know has been charged with a DWI, it is important that you speak to a DWI defense lawyer immediately.
- The consequences of a DWI conviction can be life-changing.
- The Rubas Law Offices is experienced in handling DWI cases in New Jersey.
- We can help you navigate the complicated workings of the legal system and the DMV.
